❧❧ NEGASS 35th ANNIVERSARY SING-OUT – REVIEWS ❧❧

From Alessandra Kingsford:

On Sunday afternoon, June 12, I was lucky enough to join the chorus for an exhilarating Sing-Out performance of The Yeomen of the Guard, at 51 Walden Street in Concord, MA.

This cast would grace any stage. Kaori Emery as Elsie, Angela Jajko as Phoebe, and Kathleen Larson Day as Dame Carruthers presented fine solos, capped by their gorgeous trio, "Tis said that joy in full perfection". Lonnie Powell as Colonel Fairfax used eloquent phrasing and handsome tone for "Is Life a Boon?" The Jack Point of Samuel Silvers was indeed 'well sung, and well danced'. Marion Leeds Carroll as Kate offered a lovely "Strange Adventure" with Carruthers, Fairfax, and Sergeant Merryl (a steadfast Tony Parkes).

Brad Amidon as First Yeoman and Bob Moreen as Second Yeoman were in excellent voice. Jim Miller as Sir Richard, Dafydd Mac an Leigh as Wilfred Shadbolt, and Ben Gold as Leonard Meryll all sang well. The chorus entered with gusto on "Here's a man of jollity", nicely catching the 5/4 bars. The gentlemen were particularly strong in the Act I finale, and the ladies opened Act II with glowing tone.

William Venman conducted with obvious affection for Sullivan's score. Thomas Dawkins provided the supple, witty piano accompaniment, always supportive of the singers. Thanks to NEGASS for a delightful musical afternoon!

From Arthur S. Koykka (loyal member since 1978):

It would be impossible to thank everyone by name – the performers and organizers of this event. Let me just say that you know who you are and so do we. Enough said.

Accompaniment was by a very responsive Steinway Grand, model-B, possessing a spectacular top range, and an authoritative growling bass. I wanted to take it home, as I am sure did many others. The Concord Performing Arts Center was a wholly suitable and supportive venue, with sufficient lighting to read one's score. The acoustics were appropriately lively.

Estimated timing of operettas was spot-on. Food was ready on time, and most of it was interesting and of good quality. Well --- except for the vegetarian sandwiches that contained bacon.

The finales to some operettas were graced by interpolated high notes by talented sopranos. I even heard a high E-flat or two. You should continue to do so. This is show business, after all.

A few people should be singled out. William Remmers sang several parts, and adjusted nicely for the requirements of each role. We weren't expecting the banjo performance in the minstrel show sequence in Utopia, but it was nicely done and made that scene a standout experience for the listener.

The tambourine work of conductor Thomas Dawkins in the above scene was both appropriate and over-the-top. We need to see more of this operetta: the music is worth hearing and the attire is still current. Have any of you seen a real 19th Century minstrel show? Very likely not. They were racist to be sure, and the British loved them.

Someone should design and give a trophy to Stephanie Mann who sang what may be the best soprano aria in the G & S canon - "The Hours Creep on Apace" from Pinafore. Stephanie was on the planning committee and substituted for a soprano who became ill and couldn't perform.

But what struck the core of my enjoyment was what happened in Yeomen. I made a decision to stop singing chorus midway through Act I. I didn't know the part that well and was doing nobody any good. I wanted to listen to pianist Dawkins. And then the magic happened. Act II has a number of gorgeous ensemble numbers, and the group turned in work that in many cases was ready for performance. Balance, blend, commitment to the text and music - it was all there. I will admit to tearing up on several occasions - the kind of behavior I usually reserve for Side 8 of Der Rosenkavalier (I hope some of you understand that reference). But isn't that the reason we continue to buy tickets to music events? Always hoping for the magic, the kind we had on Sunday afternoon in Concord. (I would have yelled "Encore!" but was unable to even speak at that moment).

Thank you, NEGASS, for having the courage to pull off this event. I eagerly look forward to the next one.

From Nancy Burstein:

The Marathon Weekend hosted by NEGASS on June 11-12 was a brilliant success. All hail Rebecca Hains and Stephanie Mann for making this dream a reality. The logistics were excellent, we were all comfortable and well fed, and the musical experience was beyond praise.

I was particularly gratified to meet and reminisce with several people from my distant past, including Tony Parkes, Jim Finder, and Peter Zavon. The even more distant past was brought back by the format of the Sing-Out: musical numbers with no interspersed dialogue. That was how I learned the G&S operas in childhood, from the old D'Oyly Carte LPs (leading to a very confused idea of the plots). This time, several abrupt transitions were gracefully bridged by performers - for example, between "Willahalla, willaloo" and the Act II Finale of "Iolanthe," Angela Jajko as the Queen brightly remarked "Never mind, just kidding!" And between "A man who would woo a fair maid" and "When a wooer goes a wooing," Sam Silvers as Jack Point interjected simply "Then a bad thing happens."

It was thrilling to sing chorus from the audience, surrounded by other singers of such wonderful quality, i.e. the leads in the other productions. A high point of this experience was "Painted emblems" where it really felt like the whole hall was full of singing portraits. And it was an incomparable delight to be immersed in the entire canon over a mere two days.

Among the performances that most charmed me were Sam Silvers as Sir Joseph Porter, Miles Rind as the Duke of Monte Carlo, Rebecca Hains as Mabel, Kaori Emery as Elsie Maynard, Connie Benn as the Princess Nekaya, but wait, once I begin, how can I stop? Well, special kudos to a few more: John Dreslin, whose conducting was extraordinary both of the soloists on stage and of the assembled multitude; William Remmers who transformed himself in taking on a wide variety of parts, played the banjo brilliantly in the Minstrel number in Utopia, and then cracked us up by reappearing with his banjo at the appropriate moment during the "Little list" song; Tony Parkes, who inter alia performed the enormous and difficult role of Ludwig, helping to keep this little-known show together; and Tom Frates, whose comically malicious interpretation of Ko-ko turned the final pairing with Katisha into a match made in heaven. The occasional impromptu blocking and choreography throughout the two days was an additional pleasure.

Editor's Note: Sam Silvers, who lent his splendid talents to our Sing-Out in a variety of roles, reviewed the Sing-Out in SavoyNet, an email listserv dedicated to Gilbert & Sullivan. Please contact editor AT negass DOT org for a copy of that review.

Trial By Jury and Gianni Schicchi, Greater Worcester Opera, June 10 & 11, 2011, Warner Theatre at Worcester Academy, 81 Providence Street, Worcester, MA

I had the distinct pleasure of attending the Greater Worcester Opera's dress rehearsal of their double bill Gianni Schicchi and Trial by Jury directed by Graham Christian with music direction by Lynne LaComfora. First was Puccini's Gianni Schicchi, an opera that I am not terribly familiar with. The set was absolutely gorgeous, evoking the grand hall of a 13th Century Italian mansion. Costumes were likewise glorious, in rich brocades and velvets which must have been sweltering on stage, but looked fantastic from the house. The recently deceased 'Buoso Donati' was a life-sized stuffed mannequin with X's on his eyes and a frowny face which made me giggle every time I looked at him.

After intermission, the curtains opened to a remarkable representation of a 'Judge Judy' set for Gilbert and Sullivan's Trial by Jury. The setting was modernized to be a 'celebrity court case' between 'Edwin Sandoval Timberline' (boy band veteran and award-winning pop star, fresh from his acting debut in Facetube: The Movie) played by Taylor Lawton and 'Angelina D'Arcy Jones' (acclaimed R&B vocalist and dancer, fresh from the tour in support of her double-platinum album, It's All About Me) played by Erin Conley. The presiding Judge (star of the now-cancelled Judge Jimmy reality television show) was Benjamin Morse, the Counsel (Hollywood's first-call lawyer, familiar from numerous appearances for CNN) was Barratt Park, the Usher (Bailiff) was Thaddeus Bell, and the Foreman of the Jury was Michael Gondek. I loved this reinterpretation!

The members of the jury were all in business suits and chatting on their cell phones while the 'members of the press' were all paparazzi covering the trial (one particular standout was Mauri Tetrault who, with her giant camera, went through all sorts of acrobatics to get 'choice shots'). Edwin came in, looking like he just came from the red carpet or from the set of 'Jersey Shore' and while it was a fine voice, I didn't get a lot of diction, especially after the strong ensemble from the Jury and the Usher. The bridesmaids' entrance was truly spectacular and kudos should be given to the choreographer who, sadly, was not listed in the program. They all entered in slinky, black dresses and did a dance reminiscent of 'Single Ladies' by Beyonce (a particular standout for this was Lydian DeVere Yard, whose dancing and attitude really sold this interpretation for me).

Once again, however, I was stymied by the lack of diction. I understood the Judge's song, the Usher, and all of the ensemble pieces, but most of the soloists seemed to go more for tone (which was quite nice) than for the diction and in Gilbert and Sullivan, I feel that it is crucial. I also would like to have seen all of the Bridesmaids, Angelina included, more invested in their characters as Lydian was. A brief note to whoever costumed Angelina: Please do not have anyone wear open-toed silver sandals and black hose at the same time. It was very distracting and did not fit the 'stylish, fashion-forward' persona that I believe she was to be portraying. Also, one silver glove was very 'Michael Jackson'. Two would have been perfect.

I thoroughly enjoyed the modern setting of Trial by Jury, especially when juxtaposed with the traditional, period setting of Gianni Schicchi. There were some fantastic performances and as a whole, I thought that it was a very successful evening. I hope that the audience who attended the performance weekend felt the same.
